

Glimmer of Hope

God,

I greet you with great joy today! You are with me and your love suffuses my being.

Thank you for this gift of grace, however impermanent it might be. An abundance of ecstasy overcomes me, banishing the dark and hopeless prison I've been chained to.

I understand now that the ultimate misery and depression grew when I strayed from your path. I will forget this again, no doubt. But for now I ask you, how can I become the one you meant me to be when I'm lost in my own grey and two-dimensional loneliness?

Me. Me. Me. I grow so weary of it! How could anyone experience the vital and fiercely sacred challenge of growing to serve your specific purpose? You created me to become my best self and I've gone astray. The pain of misalignment with your will has been unbearable.

Thank you God, with joy and relief flowing through my heart in that other plain of existence. So strong it's almost physical. Thank you for giving me this glimmer of hope.

Shoshana Hadassah